b. First Tip: Use the keyboard to move in Access' Objects pane - The Database window does a great job of organizing database objects by type. To see a different type of object, all you need to do is click on the object type in the Objects pane. However, having objects stored in separate places can also be a pain, requiring you to frequently switch between object groups. If you favor using the keyboard over a mouse, you can speed things up by using shortcut keys to cycle through the Database window's Objects pane. Pressing CTRL + TAB cycles down through the Objects pane and CTRL + SHIFT + TAB cycles up. Second Tip: A shortcut for accurately selecting text on a Web page - If you've tried to highlight text on a Web page by dragging your mouse across the text with the button depressed, you know how awkward it can be. Often either some of the text you meant to select is left out, or else headings, figures, and other elements are mistakenly included in your selection. Fortunately, there's a much cleaner and easier way. Simply left-mouse click just to the left of the beginning of the text you want to select (just 'click'; don't hold down the mouse button), position your insertion point immediately following the last part of the desired text, hold down the SHIFT key and click a second time. When you do, all the text between the two mouse click points is highlighted and selected.
